People who are serving their sentence of imprisonment under a parole order, may apply to Corrective Services to transfer their order to another state in which they wish to live. Such applications may relate to family responsibilities or work opportunities.

The Crimes \(Sentence Administration\) Act 2005, provides for the interstate transfer of parole orders. Once a parole order is formally transferred to another state, that order becomes an order of the receiving state and is managed according to that state's laws.

For example, where a parole order is revoked after it has been transferred to the ACT from another state, 'clean street time' will not be taken into account, and where an ACT parole order is transferred to another state from the ACT and is later cancelled, 'clean street time' may be considered.
